"SCIENCE COURT"

All rise. "Science Court" is now in session.

From the creators of the award-winning "Dr. Katz: Professional Therapist," comes this unique, animated series that combines real science and real humor in a courtroom where science is the law and scientific thinking rules. "Science Court" doesn't just make learning fun, it makes it hilarious.

Judge Stone, voiced by popular comedian Paula Poundstone, presides over the wacky characters of "Science Court." In each episode, science attorneys face-off over some strange and funny cases. But, as each hysterical trial unfolds, so do fundamental science concepts.

With her off-the-cuff humor and dry wit, Judge Stone manages to keep her courtroom in order, which is no easy task with the wonderful cast of characters:

ATTORNEY DOUG SAVAGE: voiced by co-creator and co-writer Bill Braudis, Doug is a lovable dope. He may never win a case, but if he can finally understand the science, anyone can.

ATTORNEY ALISON KREMPEL: as Doug's nemesis, Alison always has her facts straight. And, you never want to miss her closing argument. She ends each case leading the jury in a catchy song. Voiced by Paula Plum.

TIM: Alison's smart and trustworthy young assistant. Voiced by Tim Snyder.

STENOGRAPHER FRED: a stenographer with a hearing problem, and he doesn't type very fast. Voiced by comedian and writer Fred Stoller, Stenographer Fred is irresistible.

JEN BETTERS: a reporter with Science Court as her beat, Jen covers each trial live from the courtroom. Voiced by Jennifer Schulman.

PROFESSOR PARSONS: an overqualified science teacher from the local university, Professor Parsons is Alison's key expert witness. His experiments and explanations will have you laughing with understanding. Voiced by H. Jon Benjamin.

MICAELA: a giggly, young girl who helps Doug grasp science concepts. Voiced by Micaela Hebert.

The season's case load includes some real shockers. In one episode, movie star J.C. Cramwood accuses bike maker, and former high school classmate, Jack Jenkins, of sabotaging his bicycle. Every time Cramwood hits the brakes, he gets bopped in the head. Is it sabotage or just inertia? And in another case, "Science Court" considers whether or not an astounding rise in left-handed people means Earth is being invaded by UFOs. It seems it all depends on how you gather and interpret the data.

Consulting on the series is Dr. Arthur I. Pober, a former school principal who has served on numerous children's advisory councils including The Entertainment Software Rating Board, Children's Advertising Review Unit - Council of Better Business Bureau and Board of Education of the City of New York.

The series was created by Tom Snyder, David Dockterman and Bill Braudis. Executive producers are Tom Snyder and Bonnie Burns. "Science Court" is produced by Loren Bouchard and is a production of Science Court, Inc. The program is brought to life in the same Squigglevision animation, a trademark of Tom Snyder Productions, Inc., used in "Dr. Katz: Professional Therapist."
